Scoring

For each "a" you select as an answer, add 3 points to your score. For each "b" you select as an answer, add 2 points to your score. For each "c" you select as an answer, add 1 point to your score. Add up your total points for a final score.

Remember, you can re-evaluate your readiness at any point in time when you feel your selections may change.

Suggestions

If your score is a total of 10 points, distance learning may not be the best learning environment for you at this time.

If you score between 11 to 20 points, the closer you are to 20 points, the more distance learning may be an option for your courses. Please reconsider your schedule and study habits, though, and talk with an academic advisor before registering for a distance course.

If your total score is between 21 and 30 points, distance learning is a viable option for your courses. The closer you are to 30 points total, the more ready you are for a distance course.
